Parenting	Shaping the Next Generation: Helping Parents Seize Their Brief Window of Opportunity	David and Elaine Atchison	Today's parents are constantly asking themselves, "Am I doing enough for my children? Do I have enough influence to make sure they turn out right?" Because we have bought into the myth that parents have less influence on their children than schools, media, government, or the church, many parents have relinquished their brief window of opportunity to make a difference. "Shaping the Next Generation" helps parents grasp God's vision for their children and design an intentional character-building strategy that really works. Parents discover effective ways to nurture and discipline children up to age twelve, learning how to balance instruction and correction in the discipline process. Charts, worksheets, sidebars, and appendices offer further resources for helping parents disciple their children and pass the faith on for generations to come.
Parenting	Growing Up God's Way	John A. Stormer	John Stormer's goal is to challenge parents to love their children and then train them so that others will love them too. His book is based on his experience as a husband, father and grandfather and his work with hundreds of families during fifteen years as a pastor and Christian school superintendent. GETTING CHILDREN READY FOR SCHOOL AND LIFE has to start at birth and it can never stop. Following World War II a generation of parents lost sight of that truth and the tragedies have been multiplying ever since. GROWING UP GOD'S WAY documents how child-rearing methods have changed and the tragic problems which result when children "just grow up." By examining the methods used by successful dedicated parents in history and during Bible times. John Stormer gives today's parents a vision of what they can accomplish in their children's lives. Step-by-step instructions for training children from birth to age five are followed by practical principles which will help parents build happy successful Christian lives for themselves and stable, satisfying, solvent marriages and homes for each other.
